The producers of a forthcoming documentary feature film about life in Britain after the Second World War are looking for stories from the general public to contribute to the research and development of the film.

Individuals, groups and communities can contribute their stories, memories and personal archives of this important time in Britain's history through a specially built website:
<http://spiritof1945.ning.com>.

The site has clips of archive materials kindly donated by British Pathé, which can be viewed and commented on. People can also upload their own content to the site, whether that's their own stories in the 'Your Stories' section, or photos and moving image.

In addition the Spirit of 1945 project is planning a small tour of venues in the East Midlands and at these events people can contribute their stories to camera and bring along photos and memorabilia which can be scanned and added to the project's database.

The stories, images and footage that are added to the website and gathered at these events will contribute to the initial research and development phase of the feature film and all contributions are gratefully received.
